(in-progress) Graphics file format (if ever they're used.) 1.Ishimaru series The, sometimes shortened to is the name of a style of Japanese ink drawing that is mainly used for calligraphy. It is a lively, expressive, and contemporary style, in contrast to the plain, quiet, and meticulous style used for traditional styles of Japanese calligraphy. Styles There are four main styles in the Ishimaru, including the "simple" style (), "detail" style (), "flux" style (), and "aromatic" style (). These styles are roughly divided according to the size of the letters and their overall appearance, but they are not mutually exclusive. However, the handwritten script of a particular artwork will generally be in one style more than another. Simple style This is the most basic style of the Ishimaru. It is a simple style that leaves everything to the viewer's imagination. The letters may be written with a thick, heavy brush or thin fine brush, and the surface of the paper may be rough or smooth. The strokes are spaced out evenly, so there is no competition between strokes; there is one stroke per letter. The ink strokes could be composed of outlines of characters, lines, or both. The intensity of the lines could be varied by changing the width of the strokes; however, when the lines are thicker, they tend to be less expressive. An irregular thickness would further increase the expressive quality of the lines. Detail style This style is a modification of the simple style, in which a lot of detail is included. It is used for specific occasions in calligraphy, such as the composition of a dedication, or for special purposes. The strokes are arranged so that the pen doesn't have to travel too far to write the
