How can I set a PHP header to output the current date and time when the files are generated? I tried using the following but it outputs the date and time to the same file and I get a blank page. A: `header('Content-type: text/html; charset=UTF-8');` This line is what will be generate the date. `header('Content-type: text/html; charset=UTF-8');` `echo date('Y-m-d H:i:s');` It's working. . Note: There are more use cases than the ones mentioned above. The only rule to create a good structure is to use as much as possible the method you declared and the class with the method declared. The same with private methods: if you define a method as private, it should be used only by the class that declared it. public methods When you need a public method, the best way to implement it is to define it as a class. ClassName { public void foo () { } } This way you're defining a class named ClassName and a method foo with a return value void. You can have as many methods as you want. Each of them in their own class. The ones listed here are the 3e33713323
