Q: Is there a way to do side button clicks the way iOS does? If I tap the home button while an application is running, iOS will automatically dim that application's screen and display the application switcher interface. I would like to do something similar, by dimming the screen and displaying the app switcher interface for the current application. Is there any way to accomplish this? A: There is no official iOS API to "dim the screen" (i.e. set the brightness level to zero). To do that, you can use

CoreImage filters such as `CIFilter *f = [CIFilter filterWithName: @"CIAudioRampFilter" keysAndValues:`

`kCIAudioRampDitherKey, @0, @0, nil]; [f setDefaults];` or `CIFilter *f = [CIFilter filterWithName:`

`@"CIAudioPanoramaFilter" keysAndValues: kCIAudioPanoramaDitherKey, @0, @0, nil]; [f setDefaults];` and execute the filter before the content area is drawn. In your application delegate, you can then add the same filter to the `CIImage` to be displayed. An example of this approach can be found here. The application switcher shows already an animation with the content area being dimmed, so it is not necessary to run additional filters. Q: How many ways can the three digits 0-9 be rearranged so that the number of ones in each three digit is the same? When I solve this problem I get two solutions (1130 and 1206) but one of them is wrong since the first number has only 4 ones and the second has only 7 ones. The answer on the website however is 1230. How is this possible and is there a way to get 1230? A: The general approach to this problem is to find the product of all the numbers that are single digits. That number is determined by what positions they are in the list. Then, you multiply the product by the number of sets of three numbers that have the same product. The answer you found is essentially the product of each of the digits with this set of three digits. Using this approach, there are two ways to have 4 ones in 3 digits. One is AAA.

Q: External Clickable Indicator I need a clickable Indicator on my activity like the sound-indicator for the youtube app. I have made some research and found out, that I need to make it in the style of a Toolbar. However, I am not sure how I can trigger the clickable click-function while my app is active (and after clicking the indicator opens the youtube app or a website). Does anyone know how to do that? A: Try this: `VideoView videoView = new VideoView(this); videoView.setVideoPath("path to`

`your video"); videoView.setOnCompletionListener(new OnCompletionListener(){ @Override public void` `onCompletion(MediaPlayer mp) { //start your youtube app or website here } }` The Surface Pro 3 has really impressed me. My original review of the Surface Pro 2, which I reviewed in September of last year, was one of the strongest I've ever written. I was also really excited about it. After it was released there was some debate about whether the Surface Pro 3 was going to be the true successor to the Surface Pro 2 but I was convinced it was. After using the Surface Pro 3 for a few weeks, though, I have to wonder whether it is a worthy successor. I'm really looking forward to giving it to my wife as a Christmas present. I will probably give it the first go with her so that she's happy with the Surface Pro 3. I have been using the Surface Pro 3 for around three weeks now and, while I'm still a big fan of the device, the switch to a larger screen size seems to have been a mistake. I'm going to start trying to use the Surface Pro 3 with an external keyboard and a mouse to get a feel for how it performs. At the same time I'm working on some less-exciting but still-important reviews. I'll talk about those in another post and will probably start doing more in-depth articles on various hardware and software issues over on the Surface team blog. So, please, if you haven't read my original review of the Surface Pro 2, go read it first before reading this one. You can find it here.
