This time you need to look for.WInstaller, that should be in 'ESET Folder' for each folder in 'ESET Folder' in 'Install CNF.' You need to find.WInstaller and delete it. It will ask you to replace it with.wInstaller that is already there. You need to overwrite with'mara-fix v1.8 Final Specjalnie dla mmoct.eu' and it will fix the problem. Swiping right over the phone you will find the window with'mara-fix v1.8 Final' That will then ask to replace m.moct.eu with.wInstaller. Try that and let me know in the comments if it worked. I will give some options to. Q: How to test if a loop has completed, to minimize memory consumption? I have a loop that iterates over a list of players, and I want to test if all players have joined and continue or stop when they have. Right now, I'm keeping track of the players with my own array, but I think the memory consumption is huge. My idea is to have an array of pointers pointing to player objects, and use a while loop to check if they are all null, but I want to know if there is a way to have some type of loop for that, since it is a shared array. Thanks in advance! A: Look into using a condition variable for this. You can have a single condition variable in your class, and multiple consumers. Once the consumer signals that it has completed, then you can unblock the condition variable, and see if all the consumers are done: class Player { private: std::condition_variable condition; unsigned int id_counter; public: void join() { while(!condition.wait_for(std::mutex{},std::chrono::seconds{10})) { //somewhere a new player comes in } //All players are done } } For this to work, you also need to be using a separate thread to "spawn" a new player, and join them all at the same time: void Player::spawn() { condition.notify_all
