Fukushima prefecture in Japan was affected by the Great East Japan Earthquake and the Fukushima nuclear accident on 11 March 2011, which resulted in multiple deaths, fires and a major release of radioactive materials. The purpose of this study is to examine infant mortality in Fukushima following this disaster. This study included all infant deaths due to natural causes (n = 496) registered as of 31 December 2013 in Fukushima prefecture, and compared it with all infant deaths in the same prefecture (n = 4859) for the period 1 October 2008 to 31 March 2013. The infant mortality rate in Fukushima was 7.3 infant deaths per 1000 live births (95% CI: 5.3, 9.3). This rate was significantly higher than that of the same period before the disaster (1.0, 95% CI: 0.4, 1.7) and the rate of the same prefecture for the same period (4.7, 95% CI: 3.9, 5.5). The risk of post-disaster infant mortality was significantly higher in Fukushima than in the same prefecture for the period 1 October 2008 to 31 March 2013 (risk ratio 1.58, 95% CI: 1.12, 2.24), and there was a significant difference in risk of post-disaster infant mortality between Fukushima and the same prefecture for the period 1 October 2008 to 31 March 2013, after adjusting for maternal age and maternal body mass index. the increased inlet pressure as the circuit 48 runs the discharge path through the combination of the ambient air chamber 22, the air port, the filter, and the air-outlet port. As previously mentioned, the air-outlet port and the air port can operate at suction pressure and thus can vent a small amount of the increased inlet pressure through their respective paths. As the last step of the compression procedure, the back pressure is decreased as the circuit 48 is re-opened to a configuration of having the combination of the ambient air chamber 22, the air port, the filter, and the
